Characteristics of Romantic Music

The Romantic era brought about several defining characteristics that distinguished it from its Classical predecessor. These elements reflect the broader cultural and artistic movements of the time.

Emotional Expression

One of the most prominent features of Romantic music is its emphasis on emotional expression. Composers sought to convey deep feelings and personal experiences. This led to:

- Programmatic Music: Many Romantic composers created works that were inspired by literature, nature, or personal experiences, often accompanied by descriptive titles that indicated their themes.
- Lyrical Melodies: Romantic melodies are often more expressive and expansive compared to Classical melodies, focusing on the singer's or instrumentalist's emotional delivery.

Expansion of Form and Structure

- Expanded Orchestration: The size of orchestras grew, and composers began to explore the unique timbres of different instruments, creating rich and varied soundscapes.

Nationalism and Exoticism
