Introduction to the Night of the Living Dead Screenplay

Night of the Living Dead screenplay is a seminal work in the horror genre that has left an indelible mark on cinema, shaping the way zombies are portrayed in films. Written by George A. Romero and John A. Russo, this 1968 screenplay not only launched a franchise but also established a new language of horror. The film tells the story of a group of people trapped in a farmhouse during a zombie apocalypse. It delves into themes of survival, societal breakdown, and human interaction in the face of impending doom.

The Origins of Night of the Living Dead

The screenplay for Night of the Living Dead emerged from a combination of inspiration and necessity. George Romero, alongside his collaborators, sought to create a horror film that was both terrifying and thought-provoking.

Inspiration and Concept

Romero and Russo drew inspiration from classic horror films and literature, particularly the works of Richard Matheson, whose novel "I Am Legend" influenced the story's post-apocalyptic setting. The idea of reanimated corpses, however, was not new; it was the execution of this concept that set Night of the Living Dead apart.

Key elements of inspiration included:

- The portrayal of zombies as a metaphor for societal issues.
- The blending of horror and social commentary.
- The use of a confined setting to heighten tension and fear.

The Creative Process

The screenplay's development was marked by collaborative efforts and a tight budget. Romero and Russo initially intended to create a low-budget horror film that would appeal to audiences without the need for elaborate special effects. This decision led to innovative storytelling techniques that focused on character development and psychological horror rather than traditional jump scares.

Structure of the Screenplay

The Night of the Living Dead screenplay is structured in a way that builds tension and develops characters while advancing the plot. The screenplay adheres to several classic storytelling principles, which can be broken down into key components:

Act One: The Inciting Incident

The film begins with a prologue that sets the tone for the unfolding horror. A young woman, Barbara, visits a cemetery with her brother, Johnny, when they are attacked by a zombie. This shocking moment serves as the inciting incident, pulling the audience into the narrative and establishing the world in which the characters must navigate.

Act Two: Conflict and Character Development

Once the characters are trapped in the farmhouse, the screenplay delves into interpersonal relationships and the dynamics of survival. The group consists of:

1. Ben – The strong and decisive leader.
2. Barbra – The traumatized survivor.
3. Harry Cooper – The contentious father figure.
4. Helen Cooper – Harry's supportive yet conflicted wife.
5. Tom – The practical young man.
6. Judy – Tom's girlfriend.

The screenplay effectively showcases the characters' personalities, fears, and motivations, which adds depth to the narrative. Tensions build as differing viewpoints on survival strategies emerge, leading to conflict within the group.

Act Three: Climax and Resolution

The climax of the film occurs when the group faces a massive onslaught of zombies, forcing them to confront their fears and the consequences of their decisions. The screenplay culminates in a tragic and shocking resolution, highlighting the futility of survival in a world overrun by the undead. The film ends on a bleak note, with Ben being shot by a group of vigilantes who mistake him for a zombie, reinforcing the theme of human versus human conflict amidst chaos.
