Love addiction is often misunderstood as simply being in love or having a strong attachment to someone. However, it is a more profound and often destructive condition.

Definition and Symptoms

Love addiction can be defined as an obsessive need for emotional and physical intimacy that leads to compulsive behaviors in relationships. Symptoms may include:

- Preoccupation with relationships: Constantly thinking about a partner or potential partner.

1. Childhood trauma: Experiences of neglect, abuse, or abandonment during childhood can lead to an unhealthy attachment style.
2. Low self-esteem: Individuals may seek validation and self-worth through romantic relationships.
3. Co-dependency: A learned behavior where individuals rely on others for emotional support, leading to unhealthy attachments.
