Types of Training Offered

Roger That K9 Training encompasses various types of training to cater to different needs and objectives. Below are some of the primary types of training offered:

Basic Obedience Training

Basic obedience training is the foundation for all other training. It teaches essential commands such as:

- Sit
- Stay
- Come
- Heel
- Down

This type of training is crucial for establishing a solid behavior framework and is often the first step in the Roger That K9 Training program.

Advanced Obedience Training

Once basic commands are mastered, advanced obedience training focuses on off-leash control, advanced commands, and complex behaviors. This includes:

- Distance commands (e.g., sending the dog to a specific location)
- Emergency recall (ensuring the dog returns immediately in critical situations)
- Distraction training (teaching dogs to remain focused despite distractions)

Service Dog Training

Service dog training aims to prepare dogs to assist individuals with disabilities. This specialized training covers tasks such as:

- Guiding visually impaired individuals
- Alerting to medical conditions, such as seizures or low blood sugar
- Providing mobility assistance

Service dog training is rigorous and requires certification to ensure that the dog meets all necessary standards.

Therapy Dog Training

Therapy dogs provide comfort and support to individuals in hospitals, nursing homes, and schools. The training process emphasizes:

- Socialization in various environments
- Desensitization to different sounds and situations
- Basic obedience skills tailored to therapy work

- Tracking skills
- Navigation in various terrains and environments

SAR dogs undergo extensive training and must pass rigorous tests to demonstrate their capabilities.

Training Methods and Techniques

Roger That K9 Training employs a variety of methods and techniques, ensuring that each dog receives the best possible training suited to their needs.

Socialization is a crucial aspect of dog training. Roger That K9 Training places significant emphasis on exposing dogs to different people, environments, and experiences to help them become well-rounded and confident.

Key socialization techniques include:

- Controlled playdates with other dogs
- Visits to public spaces (parks, cafes, etc.)
