Early Life and Context

Background

Rosa Louise McCauley was born on February 4, 1913, in Tuskegee, Alabama. Raised in a family that valued education and activism, she experienced racial discrimination from a young age. Parks' early experiences with racism shaped her worldview and laid the groundwork for her future activism.

The State of Racial Segregation

The early to mid-20th century was a period of intense racial segregation in the United States, particularly in the South. Jim Crow laws enforced a system of racial apartheid, dictating where Black individuals could sit, eat, and even use public facilities. The impact of these laws created a society rife with inequality, oppression, and dehumanization, affecting the lives of millions of African Americans.

principle of respect for all individuals, regardless of race. Her arrest for this act of civil disobedience was a pivotal moment in the civil rights movement.

Immediate Aftermath

Parks' arrest led to an uproar within the African American community. Leaders such as E.D. Nixon and Martin Luther King Jr. mobilized citizens to boycott the Montgomery buses. This pivotal event marked the beginning of a 381-day boycott, during which African Americans refused to use the bus system, significantly impacting its revenue.
